Handling payments: FastSpring

Like Stripe, FastSpring is a payment processor for DayBack and collects information necessary to charge credit cards for subscription, This includes name, billing address, and email information as described in the FastSpring privacy policy: <https://fastspring.com/privacy/>

This processing constitutes a sale based on the definition under the CCPA. In addition to the information in this clause, the User can find information regarding how to opt out of the sale in the section detailing the rights of Californian consumers.

Calendar sharing

When you make a share, the calendar sends each of the visible events to DayBack's Firestore Database: almost like exporting your events. The share also records the current view, date range, and filters you have employed.

When a recipient opens a shared URL, DayBack reads the shared events from the "export" on our server instead of from your original data source (like Google or Salesforce). Share recipients have no access to your original data source and no access to events that weren't visible when you made the share.

When exporting an event, DayBack only sends the information you can see in the view you shared, along with the information you can see in the event's popover (what you see when you click on an event). Other attributes of the event, or attributes of records related to the event, aren't exported to the share.

As you edit events in DayBack, the calendar looks to see if the event is part of a share. If the event is shared, DayBack re-exports the event to DayBack's server, keeping the share in sync with your changes to the event. Shares themselves don't poll DayBack's server for changes so someone viewing a share while you make a change would need to click "refresh" to see your change take effect.

This processing constitutes a sale based on the definition under the CCPA. In addition to the information in this clause, the User can find information regarding how to opt out of the sale in the section detailing the rights of Californian consumers.

Salesforce AppExchange

added to DayBack's email list on Campaign Monitor, as are customers who install or purchase DayBack. Customers purchasing DayBack on the AppExchange have their payments handled through Stripe.
